The Collapse & Post-America

The Collapse is a well known cornerstone of wignat thought, originating in the writings of Dr. William Luther Pierce & others who moved towards the NSLF after the ANP fell off. Currently, there exist two notions about the Collapse. One is a booglarp fantasy peddled by some Conservatives & Libertarians, the other is a wignat fantasy drawing from James Mason's SIEGE. Regardless, the term has gradually entered the RW lexicon as people stopped trying to "save Western civilization" & instead wanted to move past it.

The Collapse is completely muddled by unrealistic expectations & overly dramatic statements. A lot of this is due to the grandiose depictions in things like the Turner Diaries, as well as the abrasive art coming out of IronMarch. But that's all it was, art. Intentionally dramatic & grandiose to convey the message. The actual Collapse isn't anything similar.

Firstly, there's no future where the US government is toppled by a 3000 strong underground network of NatSoc revolutionaries, regardless of how cool it would be. The Collapse is a slow & systematic process that takes place in a sociological/psychological sense just as much as a physical one.

A better term for the Collapse is probably "decline." It's more tangible to track the gradual decline of any civilization than it is to pinpoint in exact moment where this process became irreversible. Perhaps the Collapse is simply the point where appearances fall apart formerly, like when the Roman Empire formerly ceased existing as a distinct entity, while decline is the process leading to that point.

Regardless, what people on the fringes have realized for quite some time now (Left & Right) is that we're reaching the end game of Western civilization. This doesn't mean that Western society & culture simply disappears. It means that was once the Roman Empire breaks up into the post-Roman states. Most people have already seen the striking similarities to the fall of Rome & the current US, so I won't bother droning on about that.

You are living in the decline. No population growth or GDP growth will change that. You were born at the end of Western civilization, and are watching it fall further. Before anything else, this must be recognized. You must Collapse within yourself to beat the rush. The death of America is fairly similar to the death of god that Nietzsche preached. People simply do not care about the government or the constitution anymore, nor any other ideals that this country was founded upon. The national debt has far exceeded its critical point & is now mathematically impossible to pay off. Polarization is only increasing as people continue to dehumanize each other based off of petty political affiliations because they're "destroying America" or a "danger to democracy." Infrastructure is continually degrading. Even the good things that the government does (like responding to the recent hurricanes) is marred by ideological thinking & general incompetence. The US is politically incapable of waging war because anything we involve ourselves in will cause a massive uproar, see the reactions to US aid to Ukraine & Israel.

Every civilization, no matter how grand, has collapsed in the end under eerily similar conditions. To think we're special is delusional.

This isn't going to be some grand event where one day people wake up & the governments gone. It isn't going to be complete anarchy or some purge scenario. There will simply be a point where so few people care about the federal government that it loses its credibility & ability to enforce its laws. A good symptom of this is that virtually the entire country is facing a critical shortage in police officers because no one actually wants to enforce the law on either side. At what point is there simply not enough cops to do anything other than respond to the most important crimes like murder (which is also becoming increasingly unsolved)?

This is collapse. This is the long process of people gaining an increasingly negative or nihilistic view towards the established System & giving into radical ideologies, tribalism, etc. This is the slow death of the American empire.

Whatever radical ideology you subscribe isn't going to "win" in the Collapse. People aren't going to magically start believing in your cause because the old authority is now devalued. When the US finally croaks, the balkanization is going to follow the already established sociopolitical lines. States declaring independence or confederation, racial or religious groups sticking together, etc. California isn't going to magically declare itself Communist & the PNW won't be the Fourth Reich.

The reason radical ideologues want a collapse is simply because it's easier to spread these ideas when the established system is gone & new systems are gaining a foothold. This is why the radicalism across the spectrum was so strong in Weimar Germany but not in the Empire less than a decade prior. The economic issues & Jewish influences were just symptoms of an empire in decline.

I don't think I need to reiterate my previous statements about conservatism or traditionalism, both because it's fading in the RW sphere & repetition is annoying. I think most people are begrudgingly coming to the realization that the West is dead, as dead as the Hellenic world of antiquity & the Christian dominated world of the HRE/Byzantine era. We can lament this, but it's entirely natural & was always to be expected. The coming era will have its own death written into its DNA as well.

It is best to collapse within yourself to beat the rush hour.

This is something that's already been a trend for the past several years among Zoomers. The entire "anti-work" movement (which has been far more influential than you think it has) showcases this. The general trend towards antisocial thinking & disregard/malice towards society shows this. Regardless of any moralizing about this, it is ultimately a good thing as it serves to kill off what remains of the System & thus bring forth something new.

Prepare for war. As I side, there's not gonna be some fantastical NS insurgency & the incels aren't gonna revolt. That being said, this process has never happened peacefully. We may see the rise of a Caesar/Napoleon figure in the death rows of America, which would likely be Trump or someone in his clique. I'd argue that the post-Trump stage is more likely to bring this figure up, which is still in the very near future. I've also heard that Hitler was effectively the Napoleon of the entire West, and thus that stage has passed. Who knows.

Regardless, prepare for a major conflict as the decline continues. Maybe this will be a huge war with definite sides, maybe it'll be a general sense of chaos as old logistics systems come apart & different groups start vying for territory. Find a group & prepare yourselves, to assume this will happen without strife is delusional. You might not be able to afford a house now, but eventually you'll be able to just take one.

Collapse now to avoid the rush.

As a side note, I doubt Trump will be some Caesar figure. He just doesn't have it in him. If there was ever a moment for him to do so, it was January 6th. He had the greatest opportunity to cross the Rubicon & chose not to. I think, if anything, someone in Trump's clique (Vance, Trump Jr., a red state governor) will be the first to make a radical move as they realize that demographic changes have made it virtually impossible for republicans to win nationally after 2030.

I showed a similar sentiment in my earlier argument about Eagle Pass in Texas. States that have already shown willingness to outright oppose the feds (legally or physically) are the most likely catalyst for the more active stage of the decline.

Time will tell.

I suspect such a decline would be "sparked" by state secession. Rep. Texas reps have attempted filing for succession like 4 times in the past decade only to be shot down by constitutionalist Republicans every time. Perhaps once demographics have ensured consistent losses, milquetoast whites will give more credence to the idea of secession.
